"Remittance"

Nepal has long been known as a remittance-based economy. Had migrant workers employed in Gulf countries and Malaysia, among others, not sent money to the country, the domestic economy would have collapsed long ago, so goes the saying by the country's renowned economists. But what is little known is that foreigners working in Nepal are also sending money abroad. And the size of funds that they are remitting home is increasing day by day. In the recent years many banks and financial institutions are offering Money transfers and this business has grown in to huge business.

The ever-growing banking industry in Nepal has brought a lot of economic impacts in the country. In order to operate smooth services in remittance the young and energetic workforce needs guidance on the workings of a bank and how it operates. With this in mind NBI Brings you program on "Remittance". This 1 & half days program aims to deliver the best course content with consultation with the industry experts.
